PREFACE

FIFTY years ago Josiah Quincy published an exhaustive history of The Boston Athenæum. Since that time no volume has appeared to chronicle later events. Frequent calls for information in regard to history and tradition, funds, gifts, and other pertinent facts, together with the need of a new list of Proprietors, led the Trustees in 1906 to authorize the Librarian to prepare a Centenary Volume which should satisfy this need, and at the same time serve to commemorate the completion of one hundred years.

Those who are familiar with Athenæum history and affairs will miss many portraits which they would have liked to see in this volume: the faces of Joseph S. Buckminster, Nathaniel Bowditch, Thomas Wren Ward, Edward Wigglesworth, William H. Prescott, Henry B. Rogers, George Livermore, Edward N. Perkins, Charles Eliot Norton, Charles E. Ware, Robert W. Hooper, Francis E. Parker, J. Elliot Cabot, Francis Parkman, Francis B. Crowninshield, George W. Wales, Charles R. Lowell, Lemuel Shaw, Charles Deane, Edward J. Lowell, Charles A. Cummings, and others. But when the final selection was made it seemed difficult to go beyond Presidents of the Trustees, Librarians, and the chief Benefactors of the institution, except by admitting more portraits than would be possible without far exceeding the sum set aside for the publication of the volume.

No portrait of John Bromfield has been discovered, and this must be a lasting cause for regret to every reader who has seen Mr. Bromfield's name within the covers of Athenæum books. The portrait of Miss Hannah Adams, from the original in the Trustees' Room, is, as Emerson might have said,

"Its own excuse for being."

In many cases statements here will be found to differ from those in other books. It would be too much to say that these are never errors; but by a careful study of manuscript sources many corrections have been made. To illustrate: Daniel Webster subscribed to the fund to purchase Washington's library, and his name has always appeared in the list of contributors, although he never made payment. Joseph Coolidge, who subscribed and did pay, has never before received recognition in the list.

The view of Scollay's Buildings is reproduced by permission of F. E. Belcher, Esq., and that of the Amory house by permission of Edward W. McGlenen, Esq. To several others acknowledgments are due for aid or for helpful suggestions, and especially to Mr. Charles N. Baxter, who has contributed much to the accuracy of the volume.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE ATHENÆUM ON LITERATURE IN AMERICA

By BARRETT WENDELL

The influence of the Boston Athenæum is a fact not so much in history as in the memories, and in the lives of those who have had the happy fortune to know and to feel it. At least hereabouts — and they still pleasantly pretend that true Bostonians regard the universe as radiating from the newly gilded dome of the State House — there has never been anything else quite like this truly social library, now grown to its hundredth year. It is in no sense a private place, yet it has qualities of privacy as fine as those of houses where the very fact of your reception is in itself a subtle pleasure. It is not a public place, where the whole world may jostle you until you wonder whether in some better world than this you may find yourself, if you are good here, among angels without elbows; yet it has the impersonal generosity of such publicity as makes your presence in its halls and alcoves a cordial matter of course. It is not a haunt of solemn scholarship, dedicated to the almost religious pursuit of learning, as if in erudition lay salvation; yet it is no mere play-room, where you go to free yourself from the benumbing habit of responsible duties. If one may phrase its whole quality at all, it is the one place in our old capital city of New England where those who seek what they may find in the humanity of books have most surely found the same throughout years which have lengthened into a full century.

Memory, after all, is the true custodian of such a fact as this. There must be many of us now who knew these pleasant, cool rooms when we were children. There must be many who remember how we used to climb the vanished Sumner staircase, and look into the big reading-room, where silent figures were seated at tables, with mysterious alcoves about them, containing tiers of books which made the books at home — however numerous in themselves — seem like a mere handful. There must be not a few who can recall the higher ascent still which brought us to the first picture-gallery in all our experience — a vague, splendid expanse of color and imagination. Its grandest images, to be sure, were no more masterly than that colossally unsteady King Lear, more melodramatic with his upturned gaze than he ever ranted on any stage; or than the distorted harmonies of Allston's "Belshazzar's Feast"; or than what Dean Briggs once playfully called the austerely sheepish face of Stuart's "Washington." Yet the Louvre itself, or the Uffizi, or the Prado never revealed to us again quite so vast a sense of how fine art can open our way to unconditioned aspirations of the spirit. The Athenæum has never taught us to be critical; yet it has never suffered us to be smugly content. There is ineffable charm in the outlook from its quiet windows, on the old burying-ground where the Boston generation which Copley painted lies secure. Their gray stones — particularly in the warmth of summer when the grass springs about them and the trees grow rich with shade — bring us fantastic intimations that this world of ours springs from a root deep in ancestral New England soil. And we turn from this assurance of our fellowship with our fathers to the persistent voices of elder ages and of younger, whispering from the friendly array of books here within our very reach.

That instant intimacy with literature is what the Athenæum has come to mean to us above all things else. In other libraries you may find greater wealth of learning, and far more completeness of special authority; but this is the only one hereabouts where you may stray at will, and lay your hand on any volume, on any shelf, just as you may in your own house or in the house of a trusty friend. In every other such treasury of letters you find inevitably that you are not free to roam, but must avail yourself of the service of some licensed guide. Here, for once, the whole paraphernalia of catalogues and of skilled and kind attendants — who grow to be your friends — are not obstacles in your way, but only helps, to whom you may turn if you find yourself at fault. Unless you seek them, you need never be reminded that they are here. If you seek, you shall find with a certainty beyond the general hope of this perplexing earth.

So, yielding to the reverie which carries you so swiftly from childhood to the verge of age, you can hardly fail to realize that these hospitable rooms, themselves rich now with the associations of more than fifty years, are the sanctuary, beyond all others, where the lovers of books in our New England have found their happiness with the most unerring certainty. Quite to understand what this environment means, one must have known its gentle charm for oneself. But each of us, like the elder folk who knew all this in days now fading into shadow, can hardly feel sure that such sentiments are more than chance associations, making precious to ourselves relics in which others can discern only vacuity. To reach assurance we must go beyond our own dreams and fancies, searching and exploring record of what these regions truly were in old times.

By a happy chance, such a record exists in the archives of the Athenæum. For a great many years the simple custom of the library was to write down in a book just who took volumes away to read, and how long he kept them. No trace remains of what pages these men and women turned in the pleasant seclusion of the library; but by inspecting these brief records of what they carried home, we can form some notion of what they sought and found in the cordial surroundings where the friendly inspiration of letters so surely lingers. It is a still more happy chance that when the records were most fully kept Boston was at what now seems to have been its best, awakened from the wholesome provincialism of its stout origin, and not yet thrust into the renewed provincialism of its comparative isolation. In these old pages you will find names remembered still, not only hereabouts, but across the continent, too, and across the seas. Not one of them, either, but is of ancestral New England race; and when these men and women flourished, New England was most nearly great.

They naturally fall into two groups. One consists of those who came to the Athenæum just as most of us come to-day — not as to a laboratory or a workshop, but as to a refuge where one may confidently consort for a little while with the full humanity of the present and the past. The other consists of those whose labors, chiefly of a literary kind, were helped to fruition by such generous access to learning as the Athenæum has always afforded. To feel with certainty what the influence of the Athenæum has been, we cannot do better than glance at these groups in turn, noting some of the more familiar names in each.

The record of Hawthorne's occasional visits to the reading-room is familiar to those who care for his work enough to delight in that most individual phase of it, his "Note-Books." For nearly thirty years, Rufus Choate found here plenteous food for that voracious reading by means of which he kept his wits alert and alive amid the most busy legal practice of his time. He read the classics, Greek and Latin; poetry unstintingly; sound fiction and essays, English and French; Goethe, too; and he seems to have delighted in the bound volumes of Punch. George Barrell Emerson, whose teaching stamped with distinction the minds of a whole generation of New England women, and whose writings are still authoritative concerning our native trees, read here not only his botany, but all manner of things besides — delighting most, one would gather, in standard literature. Edward Everett came here sometimes, though his own library, like George Ticknor's, was so large that he had little pressing need of books not actually in his possession; those which he is recorded as using are mostly classics, ancient and modern. His brother-in-law, the Rev. Dr. Frothingham, in the same years, read all manner of literature here, with eager catholicity of taste. Dr. Samuel Gridley Howe was a great reader, too; but at least in our Athenæum records he seems to have been more severe in purpose, taking out volume after volume on Philosophy and Science, on History and Political Economy, on Education, Physiology, Hygiene, the Mind, and the Brain. Dr. Parsons, the translator of Dante, showed insatiable appetite for fiction and biography. President Quincy is recorded as incessantly exploring literature; Calderon, Mrs. Opie, Milton, Voltaire, Cervantes, Fielding, Byron, occur in his page, almost side by side. And in six years Daniel Webster found leisure to borrow from the Athenæum six books — Sophocles, the Fables of La Fontaine, a volume of Parliamentary History, another of the History of Greece, Sparks' edition of the Works of Franklin, and the Diable Boiteux of Le Sage.

The other group, of those who used the Athenæum rather as workers than as readers, instantly reveals that the Athenæum, in its older days, was a real contributory force to the enduring literature of New England. This is perhaps most evident in the matter of history. The record of George Bancroft is considerable, and consists almost wholly of works concerning history, biography, and voyages of discovery. So does that of Dr. John Gorham Palfrey, who made considerable exploration of statistics as well. The books used by Francis Parkman generally had direct bearing on the life work which makes his memory as heroic as it is delightful. The same is true of those used a few years before by the earliest of our memorable New England historians, William Hickling Prescott. Jared Sparks came here sometimes for historical books. So, for general literature, did George Ticknor, in spite of his own rich collection, so close at hand. And Dr. Alexander Young used here the kind of books which made him so memorable an editor of our early New England records.

It was at the Athenæum, too, that some of our more speculative writers sought solid basis for their variously enduring flights of speculation. Bronson Alcott used the library frequently. So did William Ellery Channing, whose range of serious reading seems to have been exceptionally wide. James Freeman Clarke read here omnivorously. The record of books drawn by Emerson is unusually large and heterogeneous. And George Ripley seems to have found here no small part of that fervid intellectual stimulus which made him, in his younger days, so powerful a force in the philosophic renaissance once expected to remake creation on the Boston plan.

When we come, furthermore, to that less definite kind of literary activity conveniently called culture, the records are not lacking. George Hillard came here sometimes. Edwin Whipple came often. Charles Sumner sought here some of that widely various reading on which the more amiable phase of his restless memory is based. And Dr. Holmes, who began as a grave reader of works on medicine ended as a riotously general reader of everything which could possibly interest his humanely assimilative mind; his record, indeed, makes one half believe that without the Athenæum we might never have had, in its full luxuriance, that wonderful Autocrat of the Breakfast Table.

We might go on indefinitely. Hannah Adams, the first of the thousands now lying in Mount Auburn, was the first woman admitted to the use of our literary treasures. Lydia Maria Child read here sometimes; and so did Elizabeth Peabody. Sometimes President Felton came; and Richard Hildreth used the library; and so did that most accomplished of New England gentlemen, the last vividly remembered bearer of the historic name of Edmund Quincy.

Local enough all this may seem to any one disposed to smile at our Boston traditions. And even those of us who remain provincial enough to imagine these traditions important might shrewdly question the authority of such records as we have cursorily glanced at, and summarized. The fact that people signed their names for books need not mean that they ever actually read them. Nor does the fact that somebody has read a good many volumes in any given place imply that he has not read more elsewhere. Yet it is hard to believe our memoranda insignificant.

It is a real truth that the Boston of the mid-nineteenth century, whatever the positive value of its thought and expression, was the most memorable centre of intellectual activity yet developed in English speaking America. It is a real truth that the names we have hastily repeated were among those which helped make Boston memorable. It is a real truth that, in the Boston of their time the Athenæum was already such a centre of humane influence as we who know it to-day know it still to be. It is a real truth that, time and again, they visited it as a shrine of learning, confident that here they should find awaiting them something of what they sought. It is a real truth that each and all of them were happily and never ignobly productive. And thus considering them, we may grow to feel that our sentimental love for the Athenæum has a double consecration. It is not only consecrated by our reverent acknowledgment of all it has done for ourselves; it is consecrated more deeply still by our growing and enduring conviction that just such significance, in elder time, made it a force for righteousness and for inspiration amid that generation to which we point, and to which our children shall point, if any one dare to question whether our pride in New England be justified.

THE FIRST ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF ATHENÆUM HISTORY

By THE LIBRARIAN

THE FIRST ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF ATHENÆUM HISTORY

By THE LIBRARIAN

I

The intellectual life of the nineteenth century in Boston grew out of a love for books that can be traced back to colonial days. The Governor and Company of the Massachusetts Bay in 1629 accepted from Mr. William Backhouse eight books "to be sent for New England," and also approved for purchase several titles selected by the Rev. Samuel Skelton. But this library, if it ever reached America, had as little influence in Boston as did the more famous collections of William Brewster at Plymouth and of the Rev. John Harvard at Charlestown. The earlier demand for new publications was satisfied through private enterprise, and many booksellers had established quarters near the Town House before the end of the seventeenth century. Nearly thirty are known to have flourished there, offering their importations as well as works from the local presses. Literary activity before the year 1700 became so great that printers in Boston and Cambridge were forced to turn away orders, and New England authors had to send some of their manuscripts to England to be put in type. These conditions were peculiar to Boston, for in 1719 Daniel Neal, a traveller, stated that all around the Exchange were booksellers' shops, while in New York there was but one, and "in the Plantations of Virginia, Maryland, Carolina, Barbadoes, and the Islands none whatever."

Bookstores, however, are not libraries of reference. The need of such a library was early felt, and Captain Robert Keayne, in his will dated in 1653, attempted to meet the demand by making provision for a "Library & Gallere for Devines & Schollers to meete in." To it he bequeathed his sermons, or expositions of the Bible, and such of his books, "whether Divinitie, Hystory or Milletary," as his appointed friends might choose, "not simply for show but properly for use, they being all English, none Lattine or Greeke; . . . and though my bookes be not many, nor very fitt for such a worke being English & smale bookes, yet after this beginning the Lord may stirr up some others that will add more to them & helpe to carry the worke on by bookes of more valew, antiquity, use and esteeme." In this quaint language Captain Keayne set forth his desire for a library in the town of Boston, and it was to be not for show but for use.

In March, 1656-7, a committee was appointed to consider the model of a Town House, and in 1658 the building was completed with the help of subscriptions from one hundred and four citizens; it occupied the site of the present Old State House. There is little reason to question the existence of a library in the building soon after 1658, although it was doubtless small and for a few years not very important. In 1673-4 John Oxenbridge, calling himself "a sorry man, less than the least of all the mercies and servants of Christ," left several theological books, Euclid's geometry, and a catalogue of the Oxford Library "to the publick Library in Boston."[1]

The Town House was destroyed by fire October 2, 1711, and Judge Sewall in a letter some months later states that "in our Boston Library several valuable Books were lost, as the Polyglott Bible, the London Criticks, Thuanus's History, a Manuscript in two Folios left by Capt. Keyn the Founder; &c."

Some books doubtless were saved and formed part of a new library in the brick Town House which rose on the same site the next year, since the treasurer of Boston asked in June, 1713, that all books belonging to the Town Library be returned to the New Town House.[2]

In 1733, Colonel Thomas Fitch headed a subscrip-

[1] Samuel Mather's "Testimony from the Scripture against Idolatry & Superstition" bears at the bottom of the title-page "ffor the publike Library at Boston 1674." If the book was printed as early as 1674, about which there is some doubt, this is the only book of this early Boston library that is known to have come down to us. — See Massachusetts Historical Society Collections, iv., volume 8, pages 12, 23.

tion to procure books for the Town Library, and £90 was raised for the purpose. There the books must have been when the building was burnt December 9, 1747, since a number of "ancient books" are said to have been destroyed at that time.

This first library in Boston is of considerable interest historically, having existed for nearly a century. Although very unpretentious it was widely known, and the Rev. John Sharpe of New York, appreciating its value and still greater possibilities of usefulness, referred to it in 1713 when he suggested for his own town a library to be open every day and to all men.[1]

Meanwhile the King's Chapel Library of some two hundred theological works had been sent over by command of King William III in 1698; it was a welcome mark along the pathway to culture in Boston, and still remains, being the oldest library in New England. It has survived fire and war, and now rests in the custody of the Athenæum.

Four generations, and perhaps five, of the Mather family were collectors of books. In the Life of Increase Mather the author speaks of a fire in 1676 which destroyed Mather's house, "but by the Gracious Providence of God he lost little of his Beloved Library: Not an Hundred Books from above a Thousand; of those also he had an immediate Recruit, by a Generous Offer which the Honourable Mrs. Bridget Hoar made him, to take what he Pleased from the Library of her Deceased Husband." In 1686 we have a picture of the collection from the pen of Dunton the bookseller: "I may say, That Mr. [Cotton] Mather's Library is the Glory of New-England, if not of all America. I am sure it was the best sight that I had in Boston." Part of this collection found its way into the American Antiquarian Society's library at Worcester; and part of the Mather library of the Revolutionary period (estimated at over 7000 volumes in all) is said to have been burned at Charlestown during the battle of Bunker Hill.

Thomas Prince, famous locally as minister of the Old South Church until his death in 1758, began upon entering Harvard College July 6, 1703, to collect books, pamphlets, maps, and manuscripts "either published in New England or pertaining to its History & Public affairs." When Prince entered upon his pastoral duties in Boston in 1718 he deposited the books which he then called The New-England-Library "in the steeple chamber in the old South Church," supposed to have been his study; at the same time he began to collect works of use to clergymen.

In 1726 Prince had attempted to raise funds for a lending library, which Judge Samuel Sewall called an "inconvenient schêm." He was, however, just a generation ahead of his time, for subscription libraries, organized by a group of persons and known as Social libraries, came into prominence between 1760 and 1765. A considerable interest was manifested throughout New England, but in Boston no such project took permanent form. The field was left to the King's Chapel, Prince and Mather collections, and also to private enterprises such as commercial circulating libraries. From the time of Mein's first venture in 1765 these circulating libraries form a slender thread leading through the revolutionary years up to the opening of the nineteenth century.

John Mein, an Edinburgh bookseller, arrived in Boston in October, 1764. Having brought with him a quantity of books, linens, etc., he opened a store with Robert Sandeman, nephew of the famous preacher, and advertised many wares including English and Scotch Prayer-Books as well as Edinburgh beer and porter by the cask or dozen. Mein soon dissolved his partnership with Sandeman and in 1765 opened a bookstore and circulating library in King (now State) Street, "at the London Book-store, Second Door above the British Coffee-House."

In 1765 Mein advertised a catalogue of his twelve hundred books "in most branches of polite literature, arts and sciences." In an address to the public Mr. Mein stated that a number of gentlemen had encouraged the venture which, "tho' fraught with amusement, has been hitherto unattempted in New England." It would "amuse the man of leisure" and "insinuate knowledge and instruction under the veil of entertainment to the Fair Sex." Here was certainly an attempt to improve the intellectual life of the town.

The ambitious proprietor increased his business by starting The Boston Chronicle in 1767 and by printing several books; but he opposed the plan to boycott goods subject to stamp duties, and in his newspaper upheld the colonial policy of the British government. This so irritated the public that in October, 1769, he was mobbed. In defending himself he shot a grenadier and so thought it best to seek safety on a ship in the harbor. A few days later he sailed for Great Britain, where he soon made himself known to Lord Dartmouth and communicated his views of affairs in America.

In May, 1784, William Martin advertised in the Independent Chronicle that a "Library of Bibles and other Books" could be found at his shop near Seven-Star Lane, Main street; and among his business contemporaries were Benjamin Guild, William P. Blake and William Pelham, all well known in their day.

The founding of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences in 1780 and of the Massachusetts Historical Society in 1791 were both significant events in the awakening of Boston after the close of the Revolution. The Boston Library Society, organized in 1792,[1] is more nearly akin to the Athenæum in organization and aims. Like the Athenæum, also, it has for over a century withstood war and panic and the desire for consolidation, happily pursuing its quiet and prosperous course. Associated with these literary societies were Caleb Gannett, the Rev. Jeremy Belknap, the Rev.

[1] See Samuel S. Shaw's Historical Sketch, published in 1895.

Joseph McKean, Redford Webster, the Rev. John Eliot, Caleb Bingham, the Rev. Joseph Eckley, and others.

At this time the intellectual interest of the community found expression along many lines. Literary, professional, and scientific clubs were founded, some with periodical reading-rooms and others with collections of books for their members, and lecture courses grew in favor. It was in this environment that the men who founded the Boston Athenæum were bred.

II

In 1801 Phineas Adams, son of a farmer in Lexington, graduated at Harvard. He was a shy, diffident lad, whose poverty had forced him early to seek employment in a paper-mill. Mrs. Hannah Foster, author of "The Coquette" and other popular novels, became his patron, prepared him for college and encouraged him to write.

In 1803 Adams persuaded Edward Lincoln, a Water Street bookseller, to undertake with him a magazine which he was to edit under the name of "Sylvanus Per-se." In the first or November number of the Monthly Anthology; or Magazine of Polite Literature, Adams promised essays "On Manners and Literature, on the Improvement of Taste, and the Encouragement of Genius." His trenchant words "to Correspondents" — possibly imaginary ones — did not tend to encourage literary contributors, and through lack of manuscripts or funds or both, the project soon languished. Adams withdrew after the April number, 1804, and Munroe and Francis of Court Street took over the publication, having secured the Rev. William Emerson as editor.

The magazine became broader and more vigorous with the seventh or May number. Mr. Emerson enlisted several learned men in its support, Dr. Benjamin Waterhouse, the Rev. John Eliot, the Rev. John Sylvester John Gardiner, the Rev. Joseph Tuckerman, Peter Oxenbridge Thacher, Winthrop Sargent, among others; and the editorial notes came to have a pleasant, friendly tone that suggests communications to members of a club rather than to subscribers. In 1805 these coworkers formed a society and its constitution was signed on the third of October. The members of this society for about six years met regularly to conduct the Monthly Anthology and Boston Review as it was now called. "Its labors," said Quincy, "may be considered as a true revival of polite learning in this country, after that decay and neglect, which resulted from the distractions of the Revolutionary War, and as forming an epoch in the intellectual history of the United States."

The Boston Athenæum had its origin in the Anthology Society. At a meeting in Franklin Place, October 23, 1805, it was voted "on motion of Mr. Emerson, seconded by Mr. Shaw, that a Library of periodical publications be instituted for the use of the Society."

In May the project was again urged by Mr. Shaw, who prepared a prospectus bearing the title "Proposal for the establishing of a Reading-Room in Boston, to be called The Anthology Reading-Room." The room was to be open from nine to nine and the dues were fixed at ten dollars.

An eight page circular,[1] dated January 1, 1807, heralded the new enterprise, stating that it already had one hundred and sixty subscribers, rooms in Joy's Buildings,[2] Congress Street, and several hundred books received from the Society or acquired by gift and purchase. It was to be an institution "similar to that of the Athenæum and Lyceum of Liverpool in Great Britain." The final plan permitted the rooms to be open from eight in the morning until nine at night; but no books or papers could be taken out. Newspapers from Virginia, Kentucky, South Carolina and nearer states were to be on file, with English and French reviews and periodicals.

In October, 1806, the Anthology Society had transferred the Library to five trustees, William Emerson, John Thornton Kirkland, Peter Oxenbridge Thacher, William Smith Shaw, and Arthur Maynard Walter. The Library was incorporated as the Boston Athenæum on February 13, 1807, and the corporation organized

April 7th. One hundred and fifty shares at $300 each were authorized to provide adequate funds, and the Library was established in the early spring of 1807 in Scollay's Buildings, Tremont Street, now the site of Scollay Square. The Library in the new rooms grew rapidly, both by purchase of books and by frequent gifts. In October, 1807, the Athenæum received from a number of citizens who had associated themselves together under the title of "The gentlemen adventurers in Bowyer's historic lottery" a set of Hume's History of England, and these handsome folio volumes may still be seen upon the shelves. The "gentlemen adventurers" were: Stephen Higginson, James Lloyd, Junr, Samuel G Perkins, Isaac P Davis, Thomas H. Perkins, Thomas L. Winthrop, John Prince, Junr, Daniel Sargent, Joseph Lee, Junr, Thomas Lee, Junr, Thomas C. Amory, David Humphrys, Timothy Williams, John T. Sargent, Henry Sargent, Samuel Eliot, Jonathan Mason, and John Davis.

Mr. Shaw, who served both as Secretary and Librarian, kept in frequent correspondence with the Rev. Mr. Buckminster, then in England; Buckminster did much for the Library that would now be put in the hands of an agent, and much also that depended upon his sole judgment. At this time Shaw wrote: "The establishment of the Athenæum . . . is one of the greatest strides toward intellectual advancement that this country has ever witnessed."

Nor should its wide field be forgotten. A pamphlet published in May, 1807, named the objects of the Athenæum: a Reading-Room, a Library, a Museum, and a Laboratory.[1] The last object had been provided in September when Mr. Godon, writing in regard to a series of lectures on chemistry, stated that the Athenæum would no doubt provide him with apparatus on easy terms.[2]

In 1809 the proprietors felt the need of an entire house to ensure quiet and to provide ample space; the residence of Rufus G. Amory, Esq., north of the King's Chapel Burying Ground was purchased; it was built of wood, rough cast, and had been the home of Dr. Caner, the loyalist rector. The Athenæum used three rooms, one for periodicals and newspapers, one for the library, and the third for a collection of books lent by John Quincy Adams.

Mr. Shaw's published memorials show how busy a life he led in these rooms. Almost daily there were letters to be written to learned friends in this country and across the sea, asking aid, advice, and books. Many wrote to him about the founding of the Athenæum, and when in New England they visited him. He referred to the Library as the institution "I most cherish and love." Through the dark period of the war of 1812 he kept it alive, and was so active that people called him "Athenæum Shaw." After years of devotion his services as Librarian closed January 23, 1823. In 1824 the Trustees asked him to sit for his portrait, and in 1826 he passed away, having given the best of his life without pay, and a considerable property, to the Boston Athenæum.

Mr. Shaw kept in a blank-book during 1821–1822 a record of the duties which the janitor performed from day to day. It is a delightful compound of rules, precepts and soliloquies. Under i. those duties "not to be omitted" are given entire, and under ii. those "to be performed as opportunities may offer" are printed in part:

i.

"Every morning — Sweep the News-rooms, dust the tables, chairs, &c. and the Library-room. After breakfast clean the Lamps, & Lamp-room; see that all the books are in their places and even with the shelves.

Monday & Thursday mornings sweep the Library-room & clean everything thoroughly; put clean sand into the spitboxes, and paper and pens into the desks.

Saturdays sweep the first alcove and stairs. Clean the stoves and hearth every other Monday.

Every day clean some of the Books and wax them.

A place for everything & everything in its place.

ii.

A box of Snuff is wanted.

If we could have a Binder in the house it would be a great advantage.

The books in the 12th room are very much exposed, as every person can have the key & boys & girls spend hours in the room. Should not this be stopped & no person allowed to enter but with a proprietor?

I should think that a labil should be pasted in all our Books if for no other reason than to distinguish them from those deposited, etc., etc."

The Athenæum began early to pluck the fruits of other movements. The apparatus of the Society for Cultivating Philosophical Knowledge was purchased in 1807. The American Academy of Arts and Sciences deposited its books with the Athenæum in 1817, and the collections remained under one roof most of the time until the year 1899. In 1823 the Library of King's Chapel and the Theological Library were turned over to the Athenæum; the Boston Medical Library followed in 1826, and the Massachusetts Scientific Association's Library the same year. Thus, in a single generation the Library had absorbed several well-known collections of books in Boston.

For the surprising hold which the Athenæum had upon the affections of Boston people at this time much was due to the presidents of the period, John Lowell (1816–1819) and Josiah Quincy (1820–1829). They saw very clearly the need of a building, and with their advocacy the subject grew in importance. Fortunately James Perkins, Esq., offered to give to the Athenæum his mansion house; it was situated in Pearl Street, then an old time thoroughfare, beautified by stately houses and shade trees. The Library, which exceeded twelve thousand volumes, was moved in June, 1822, from Tremont Street to Pearl Street. The books were for the first time divided into classes, and then into minor divisions; each division was assigned to a bookcase. A room was devoted to casts and other works of art, including a portrait of Mr. Perkins by Gilbert Stuart. Stuart himself was made a life member "as a testimony of respect for his eminent talents." New by-laws were put in force, and the dues of annual subscribers, which had been advanced to $12 and then to $18 a year, fell back in 1823 to $10.

Through these years John Lowell was devoting his best energies to obtain a lecture hall in connection with the Athenæum. Subscriptions could not be raised sufficient to meet the entire cost of the proposed addition, and as there was to be a deficit with the completion of the building the proprietors could not agree upon the policy to be pursued.

The plans called for a lecture hall and an academy of fine arts, with quarters for other societies. The scheme to unite "in the Athenæum the principal circulating libraries of the city" aroused new fears in the minds of many proprietors, who in this period of library centralization had not the faith to believe that the Athenæum was fulfilling its destiny in literary Boston. At a meeting held in 1826 the more optimistic party prevailed; the proprietors voted to begin the lecture hall, and chose a building committee with Thomas H. Perkins as chairman. At this critical time the Perkins family, — Thomas H. Perkins the brother, and James, the son of the first benefactor, — offered to the trustees, on certain conditions, sixteen thousand dollars, a considerable sum as measured by the standards of that day, and greater still if measured by its value to the struggling institution. In 1821 one hundred new shares were authorized, and now in 1826 fifty more were authorized and sold, bringing the total number of shares to three hundred. Thus, through generous gifts and money received from the sale of shares, lectures and art exhibitions were made possible.

A step forward was taken in December, when proprietors were allowed, on payment of five dollars[1] annually, to take out books, three volumes at one time; these might be kept a month. On written request for a book the Librarian was to hold it one day for the person requesting it. The delivery of books was between 12 M. and 2 P. M. daily, Sundays excepted.[2] The library itself was open at eight in the morning except in June, July, and August, when its treasures were accessible as early as six. The Athenæum at this time was supported and cherished by an influential body of proprietors. That it did not satisfy the intellectual hunger of all the citizens is evident from the following notice in the Boston News-Letter and City Record for February 25, 1826:

"What literary advantages have the mass of our citizens derived from the Athenæum? Who gets a peep within its lofty walls without a ten-dollar bill? And what genius owes its expansion to the liberal facilities of the Boston Athenæum?

[1] This fee was maintained in the face of vigorous opposition later on.

[2] Quincy's History, page 108.

"When the poor are favored with admission to study the neatly fitted up shelves of books which adorn the Athenæum, we shall be convinced of the necessity as well as worth of it, and not before. Things are becoming quite royal in our venerable old city: money buys a ticket for the wealthy to read the Hebrew language, while the industrious, worthy portion of the community, may intellectually starve upon a six-penny almanack."[1]

The next progressive step was to benefit a wider constituency, although it hardly can be said to have come in response to the above notice. A gallery of casts had been opened in the new building in December, 1826. But Boston had steadily grown in importance as an art centre, and art exhibitions were much desired. To test the public interest a loan exhibition was opened May 10, 1827, under the management of the Athenæum. It was composed almost entirely of pictures lent by private owners, but so good was the attendance that in two months the gross receipts amounted to $4,000.[2] A young Harvard graduate in a letter dated June 3, 1827, bears witness to its immediate success:

"The famous exhibition of pictures at the Athenæum is now all the go, and it is, I think, well worth visiting. Besides many pieces of the Old Masters, as they are called by the amateurs and virtuosos, there are several portraits of living persons, which attract no inconsiderable attention. Miss Marshall is not there. But the celebrated Miss Howe, whose picture Miss Stewart painted as that of the Boston Beauty, and the two daughters of the Russian Consul (whose name horribile dictu I never pronounce and shall not attempt to write), are there."[1]

The "old masters" were almost entirely of the Dutch school. Lawrence's Benjamin West copied by Leslie, which now hangs in the Reading-Room, graced this first exhibition, and there were portraits of Washington and Adams by Stuart, and a miniature of George Canning, lent by Daniel Webster.

The Art Gallery of the Athenæum soon became very popular, as the following notice of the second exhibition which was printed in the Columbian Centinel for May 24, 1828, attests:

"ATHENÆUM GALLERY. All the world, as they say in France, was at the Gallery yesterday; and good judges pronounce the exhibition, in many respects superior to that of last year. The pictures from the Jefferson Collection are much admired; and great credit is given Mr. Jones for the excellent arrangement of the whole Gallery."

The Trustees soon began to collect works of art for the Gallery, and the names of West, Trumbull, Sully, Allston, Stuart, Panini, and Harding appear in early catalogues. The portraits of George and Martha Washington by Stuart, known as the "unfinished portraits," were purchased in 1831 from the artist's family for $1,500, an absurdly small sum it now seems for these invaluable pictures.[2] The works of Crawford, Greenough, Clevenger, Powers, Ball, Frazee, and other sculptors, were acquired from time to time for the "Sculpture Gallery." At the Athenæum Audubon's engravings of birds were first seen by the public; and here also many American works of art first became known, some to grow in fame, others to pass into utter oblivion. To record the names of generous donors of these years would be beyond our space; but the Library correspondence shows how wide was the influence of the Gallery.[1]

Ghosts claim an important place in the history of any ancient library. The Athenæum ghost made its appearance in 1842 and was vouched for by Nathaniel Hawthorne, then a young bachelor who frequented the Reading-Room. His experience one April day was described long after under the title "The Ghost of Doctor Harris;" it was reprinted in the Living Age, February 10, 1900. From the tale I take a few sentences to describe the "Doctor," who was Thaddeus Mason Harris, a well-known clergyman.

"That very evening a friend said to me: 'Did you hear that old Doctor Harris is dead?'

"'No,' said I, very quietly, 'and it cannot be true; for I saw him at the Athenæum to-day.'

"'You must be mistaken,' rejoined my friend. 'He is certainly dead!' and confirmed the fact with such special circumstances that I could no longer doubt it.

Emerson and many other famous men came to the Athenæum building to give lectures.

"The next day as I ascended the steps of the Athenæum, I remember thinking within myself, 'Well, I shall never see old Doctor Harris again!' With this thought in my mind, as I opened the door of the reading-room, I glanced towards the spot and chair where Doctor Harris usually sat, and there, to my astonishment, sat the gray, infirm figure of the deceased Doctor, reading the newspaper as was his wont! His own death must have been recorded, that very morning, in that very newspaper!'

"I remember — once, at least, and I know not but oftener — a sad, wistful, disappointed gaze, which the ghost fixed upon me from beneath his spectacles; a melancholy look of helplessness, which, if my heart had not been as hard as a paving-stone, I could hardly have withstood. But I did withstand it; and I think I saw him no more after this last appealing look. . . ."

Mr. Edward C. Guild in his "Letters, 1832–1899" shows that the boys of his day feared no apparitions lurking in the dark alcoves.

"The Library," he writes, "was not so much used then as now. Old Mr. Bass was Librarian, and at one time a young English boy, Fisher Keeler, was employed there, with whom some of us who frequented the Library formed an alliance, and we used to play marbles with him on the floor of the long alcoves, where we were rarely interrupted by any older person."

III

The Library in forty years had increased until it contained about 37,000 volumes; the shelves were very much crowded, and the rooms afforded inadequate space. Pearl Street was surrendering to the inroad of commerce, and a site for the Athenæum more central, and at the same time quiet, became imperative. Permission to sell the Perkins house was obtained and the Trustees decided to move to a plot of land fronting on Tremont Street, and running back to Court Square. The money for a new building was to be raised by disposing of the Perkins house and other property, by subscriptions, and by the sale of new shares. Two hundred and thirty-eight shares were issued in 1844 and 1845, the land was secured, and plans were drawn by George M. Dexter for a library, art, and office building. Later, sentiment developed against offices, and the Trustees were instructed to sell the land on Tremont Street and to purchase the Phillips estate on Beacon Street with an outlook on the Granary Burying Ground.

Three designs were submitted in March, 1846, for a building on the new site. The one by Edward C. Cabot was accepted; Messrs. Dexter and Cabot, the two architects, then joined forces for three years, and prepared working drawings. It was found necessary to obtain permission from the city to carry part of the rear wall on an arch above several ancient gravestones, so that the southern façade might avoid an awkward indentation due to the irregular boundary line.

The corner-stone of the new Athenæum was laid April 27, 1847. The accepted design represented a building one hundred and fourteen feet long, sixty feet high, and, with the exception of a grass plot in front, extending from Beacon Street to the Granary Burying Ground. The façade was built of Paterson freestone, which was hard in texture. The interior of the building was designed in the alcove style, then customary in university libraries. The cost exceeded the original estimate of $59,000 about three times; this estimate, it should be said, was not made by Mr. Cabot; but the excess occasioned some discord and resulted in a further issue of shares. The building proved, however, to be one of the most dignified in Boston, and at once increased the influence of the library. Entering the vestibule the room at the left on Beacon Street was occupied, until 1899, by the American Academy; at the right rose the imposing "Sumner staircase," torn out in 1889; back of these and looking upon the Granary was a Reading-Room at the right, and beyond this was "the long room," called the Sculpture Gallery, now a Periodical Reading-Room. The second floor was occupied as now by the main Reading-Room, and the third floor was used as a Picture Gallery.[1]

[1] A view of the Art Gallery on Beacon Street, painted by E. Meneghelli about 1875, hangs in the Library.

The library of nearly fifty thousand books was moved to Beacon Street in July, 1849.

Charles Folsom consented a year or two earlier to accept the office of librarian; it was at a time when the position began to call for ability while by custom the compensation was still meagre. Mr. Folsom was a scholar, a kindly, helpful man, whose chief service as Librarian at Harvard had been to broaden and liberalize the administration. He felt that there was work to be done at the Athenæum, and in a letter to Samuel A. Eliot he expressed his views freely:

"The office of custodian has, so far as I know, always been satisfactorily performed at the Athenæum. Not so, I believe, the other branch of a librarian's duty. By dispensing, I am far from meaning only the finding of the particular volumes asked for, or the recording of the titles of such as are borrowed. I mean quite another ability in the librarian, — an ability to 'bring forth, out of the treasure' committed to him, 'things new and old.'"

Mr. Folsom advocated a policy more liberal toward Bostonians, not shareholders, than some proprietors might approve; but his attitude toward strangers has the true ring: "Let the far-off student in the Valley of the Mississippi, who is vainly hammering at some literary task for want of books, and ignorant perhaps as to the existence of the best books on his subject, understand that, when he comes North in the summer, if he will present himself at the Boston Athenæum or Harvard University he may chance to clear off a year's docket of doubts in a single day." At this period there was no public library in Boston, and the attitude of the Athenæum toward scholars was of importance.

A new and larger building would have lost half its value had the power to purchase books been diminished. The year 1846 was, therefore, memorable for the gift of $25,000 from John Bromfield, a wealthy merchant, for a permanent fund, the income in part to be spent for books, and in part to be added to the principal. This gift has yielded $194,269 for the purchase of books, and the fund now amounts to $106,426.[1]

If the new rooms lacked "atmosphere" they were not long in gaining associations through the presence of famous men. Nathaniel Hawthorne, in his "Passages from American Note-Books" (Boston: 1868, volume 2, page 151), under the date May 5, 1850, writes: —

"Yesterday I went to the Athenæum, and, being received with great courtesy by Mr. Folsom, was shown all over the edifice from the very bottom to the very top, whence I looked out over Boston. It is an admirable point of view; but, it being an overcast and misty day, I did not get the full advantage of it. The library is in a noble hall, and looks splendidly with its vista of alcoves. The most remarkable sight, however, was Mr. Hildreth, writing his history of the United States. He sits at a table, at the entrance of one of the alcoves, with his books and papers before him, as quiet and absorbed as he would be in the loneliest study; now consulting an authority, now penning a sentence or a paragraph, without seeming conscious of anything but his subject. It is very curious thus to have a glimpse of a book in process of creation under one's eye. I know not how many hours he sits there; but while I saw him he was a pattern of diligence and unwandering thought. He had taken himself out of the age, and put himself, I suppose, into that about which he was writing. Being deaf, he finds it much the easier to abstract himself. Nevertheless, it is a miracle. He is a thin, middle-aged man, in black, with an intelligent face, rather sensible than scholar-like."

In a letter dated February 27, 1851, Mr. Folsom's assistant gives this picture of life at the Athenæum: "With the exception of the noise of the hammers in ye entry, all is quiet here, and much as usual: Mr. P—'s feet grace the table as they were wont of old, —Admiral Wormeley revels in the English papers, and Dr. Eaton sits serene in his accustomed place."

Scattered through books and papers are many references to the Gallery and the Library. The significant events in their early history have been artistic and literary rather than administrative; and many pleasant paragraphs could be gleaned from volumes of letters and reminiscences. The artist, Mr. H. Winthrop Peirce, has spoken gratefully of the Athenæum Gallery, for the most part "a black and dreary collection," but relieved from time to time by Millets, Corots and other inspiring works of art.[1] He adds: "It affected Hawthorne to such a degree that in his Note-Books he speaks of having made a gain in art culture when he could see that one oil painting was less disagreeable than another." [1]

[1] In 1875 many of the paintings and works of sculpture were transferred to the Museum of Fine Arts, whence the less worthy have returned one by one, their places taken by examples of art which better satisfy a more cultivated taste.

The Gallery, which was at this time probably more widely known and more popular than the Library itself, was of course open to women; but it rarely, if ever, occurred to the Proprietors to ask permission for their wives and daughters to go to the bookshelves. The Athenæum was a man's institution, jealously guarded, although in a few cases great pressure or conspicuous merit served to force the barriers. In March, 1829, the Trustees voted to give free use of the Library to Miss Hannah Adams, the historian, a relative of President Adams and also of Mr. Shaw. Said Mr. Quincy: "One solitary female ventured to claim the freedom of its alcoves, and to endure the raising of the masculine eyebrows, provoked by the unaccustomed sight." Here Miss Adams passed many hours a day in study, and was locked in while the Librarian went to lunch. Her sweet face, as portrayed by Chester Harding, has since looked down upon several generations of Athenæum readers. A few years later Miss E. P. Peabody and Mrs. Lydia Maria Child were given permission to visit the Athenæum. The Trustees voted in 1832 to allow Mrs. Child to take out books until further notice without paying the customary fee, and she wrote a most appreciative letter in acknowledgment of this unusual courtesy. In 1833 she published an "Appeal in Behalf of that Class of Americans called Africans," an argument in favor of immediate emancipation; it was widely read, and rendered the author extremely unpopular among a certain class in Boston. Years after the period of these events she told how the Trustees, embarrassed by her anti-slavery views, withdrew the privilege previously given; and this story has formed an interesting paragraph in popular sketches of the Athenæum. If Mrs. Child's memory is reliable some trustee must have said or written that her presence was no longer desired. But the privilege was to last until taken away by the Board, and the Trustees' Records contain no rescinding vote during the years immediately following that in which the "Appeal" was issued.

With the opening of the building on Beacon Street some of the Trustees advocated more liberal treatment of women, both by admitting them to the staff and as readers. Mr. Folsom, however, was so opposed to this policy that he felt called upon to address to the Trustees a long protest, setting forth that the construction of the present building on Beacon Street, with its narrow galleries and steep staircases, was an insuperable objection which should "cause a decent female to shrink." "Nor is it desirable," he writes, "that a modest young woman should have anything to do with the corrupter portions of the polite literature. A considerable portion of a general library should be to her a sealed book." Mr. Folsom concludes that the proposed concession to women "would occasion frequent embarrassment to modest men."

Mrs. Harnden, the first woman employee of whom we have record, came in 1857; Miss Mary A. Bean and Miss Sarah E. Gill came soon after as assistants to Mr. Charles Russell Lowell, who was preparing the manuscript for the great printed catalogue. Miss Gill, a cousin of Henry Stevens, agent for American books for the British Museum, joined the Athenæum staff in December, 1859; she had previously been employed by Benjamin F. Stevens, who rented a room in the Athenæum basement.

Mr. Folsom devoted his energy largely to developing the use of the books upon the shelves, while his successor, Mr. Poole, came much in contact with the Stevens brothers, and interested himself in the search for valuable collections of books. At about this time one third of George Washington's own library, left at Mount Vernon, with other books collected by Judge Bushrod Washington, were purchased by Henry Stevens and stored in the Merchants' Exchange building, now the Subtreasury, in Wall Street, New York. Daniel Coit Gilman, later president of Johns Hopkins University and first president of the Carnegie Institution, was then a lad, enjoying his vacation; he saw the books and offered to make a catalogue of them on cards. This catalogue was sent to Boston, where it interested several wealthy gentlemen and thus led to the purchase of the collection for the Athenæum.[1]

[1] A Catalogue of the Washington Collection, books by and about the first President, was printed in 1897 in a handsome volume, prepared by

Several other groups of books in the Athenæum are worthy of special mention. The collection of books and newspapers printed in the South during our Civil War, formed by William F. Poole, is said to be the most extensive in the world. The great collection of rare American pamphlets, made by William S. Shaw during the early days of the Athenæum, is unrivalled. There are also valuable sets of early American documents, annuals, almanacs, broadsides, as well as volumes relating to international law, Shakespeare, Byron, Gypsies, and several other subjects.[1] Single volumes of interest are the Breeches Bible, Eliot's Indian Bible, a volume from Edward Gibbon's library, one from the library of William Brewster of Plymouth, and the Memoirs of Walton, a highwayman, bound in his own skin.

The Athenæum had already absorbed many libraries that once served the community. It had held sway for half a century at the centre of an intellectual city. Now, for the first time, it was to face a formidable rival in the new Public Library, which was backed by great financial resources. It was in some danger of absorption — like the fish which, living for years upon its less fortunate fellows, may itself be devoured at the last.

Appleton P. C. Griffin, the well-known bibliographer of the Library of Congress. His notes, and those which Mr. Lane appended to titles in the Inventory, form a storehouse of information. An elaborate Index to the Catalogue, made by Mr. Franklin O. Poole, appeared in 1900.

[1] See Chapter III.

The Boston Public Library had been slowly taking form since 1841. An enabling act was passed by the Legislature in 1848 and organization came in 1852. Several Proprietors of the Athenæum were prominent in this movement, and upon its successful issue they advocated the absorption of the Athenæum by its youthful rival. George Ticknor, signing himself "An Old Proprietor," published in the Boston Daily Advertiser, March 14, 1853, an appeal for consolidation, describing the crises through which the Athenæum had passed, saved first by Mr. Lowell and Mr. Perkins, aided in 1826 by Dr. Bowditch, and in 1850 by John E. Thayer. The Athenæum was threatened with a proposed issue of new shares, while the Public Library had the city's resources behind it and also several large gifts. Among those who followed Mr. Ticknor were many well-known proprietors.[1] It certainly seemed as though the Library that had outlived so many others was to meet its Waterloo.

The "venerable Mr. Quincy," as Mr. Ticknor called him, was asked at this time by George Livermore to make an attempt to save the institution, and his ringing "Appeal" opens with no uncertain tone: —

"The proposition is nothing less than this, — that one of the oldest monuments which patriotism and public spirit, and the love of learning, in this country, ever raised, — which has been supported and enlarged, during nearly fifty years, through a succession of difficulties of various kinds, by the unremitted labors of generous, self-sacrificing men, — should, in this palmy moment of individual and city prosperity, when wealth was never more abundant and public spirit never more active, be surrendered up by those to whom its founders entrusted it, and its property be delivered over to the care of a political body, annually shifting its members, and changing principles and policy with every turn of party or passion. Such I understand to be in effect the proposition; and, in my judgment, it is unjust, unwise, and unprincipled.

"Let us spurn the intimation, included in the very proposal of this 'Old Proprietor,' that the present proprietors of the Athenæum have less energy, less fidelity, and less spirit, to meet the exigencies of the institution, than their predecessors. At a time when this institution possesses the most substantial and beautiful Library Building in this country, and one which will compare favorably with any in the world, — of a value not less than two hundred thousand dollars, and wholly paid for, — a Library containing more than fifty thousand volumes, — a large and most valuable collection of pamphlets, — books of the most rare, splendid, and costly character, daily augmenting by the liberality of its friends and benefactors, — the richest collection of pictures and statuary in America, — the whole property of the Athenæum being in value not much less than half a million dollars, with the Bromfield Fund for its increase, now amounting to twenty-seven thousand dollars, — the institution wholly out of debt, and wanting nothing but a fund adequate to meet the yearly occurring expenditures, and to add to the power of the Bromfield Fund in the department of new books and periodical publications, — at a time when this institution is, in truth, in a higher state of prosperity than it was at any one of those periods when our predecessors rallied to its aid, and not only supplied its wants, but elevated its fortunes, — at such a time, are we ready to abandon its fair hopes, and give ourselves up to despair? Under such circumstances and with such examples, are we content to put our fingers in our eyes, and whine about 'difficulties'? Was not the Athenæum founded in difficulty,—created with the expectation of difficulties? Has it not met difficulties during fifty years and gloriously surmounted them all? Let us away with such unmanly fears, and nobly resolve, 'out of this nettle,' difficulty, 'to pluck the flower,' success.

JOSIAH QUINCY,
The Sole Survivor of the first Five
Subscribers to the Athenæum.
March 24, 1853."

The meeting to decide the fate of the Athenæum was held March 28th; a parody, handed to Miss Eliza S. Quincy at the time, describes the scene:—

On Beacon, when the sun was low,
The young, the old, the fast, the slow,
Were rang'd in many a solemn row,
Throughout the Sculpture Gallery.

President Cary reviewed the history of the institution while the crowd gathered. They adjourned to Freeman Place Chapel; and Samuel A. Eliot moved to appoint a committee to report on the legality and expediency of selling the Library to the City. This was lost "by a large majority." On a motion of Hon. F. B. Crowninshield the Proprietors voted not to sell "because we believe that by so doing we should act contrary to the wishes and intentions of many of its founders and benefactors, and to the best interests of Literature and Science in this Community." The parody concludes:—

Josiah Quincy

The vote is taken! On ye brave!
The Credit of your Scholars save —
Wave, L[ivermor]e, thy proxies wave!
Charge on the "Old Proprietor"!

Ah, few shall part where many meet,
Without a laugh at that complete
And unequivocal defeat,
And glorious minority!

The new shares, which were authorized on account of the large amount expended in completing the Beacon Street building, were taken by subscribers during 1854-1858, making in all 1049 shares issued. The chief purchasers, who became virtually benefactors, were: Dr. George C. Shattuck, John Amory Lowell, Nathan Appleton, Josiah Bradlee, George Williams Lyman, David Sears, Martin Brimmer, John Eliot Thayer, John Chipman Gray, William Sturgis, and the Executors of Thomas H. Perkins, Samuel Appleton and Robert Gould Shaw, Sr.

Mr. Poole came to the Athenæum in 1856, from the Mercantile Library. There he had recently completed a catalogue of books. The need of a similar catalogue at the Athenæum was evident, and Mr. Poole's experience led the Trustees to make a beginning. The plan, however, contemplated little more than a title-a-line list, and the work was intrusted to young and inexperienced men. The result proved not wholly satisfactory to Mr. Poole, and in 1862 Charles R. Lowell was given charge of the work. For the next eight years he steadily carried on the revision, removing defects as far as was possible without entirely recasting the scheme. After Mr. Lowell's death in 1870 Charles A. Cutter, who succeeded Mr. Poole in 1869, revised and printed the monumental work in the five volumes now so familiarly known as the Athenæum Catalogue. Ezra Abbot and other bibliographers commended the work highly for its analytical feature, its cross references, typographical excellence and bibliographical accuracy. In all these respects the Catalogue has stood the test of time, worthy of Mr. Lowell's and Mr. Cutter's scholarship.

A public library, where a large part of the demand is for current literature, would hardly have been justified in such an undertaking, since the Catalogue, completed in 1882, included no book published after January, 1872. In 1902 it represented less than half the library, and in 1903 the trustees authorized the librarian to have two copies cut up, the titles to be mounted on cards and inserted in the card catalogue of accessions, thus forming one complete index to all works in the library.

The years that were passing brought many changes, due in no small measure to Mr. Cutter's active brain and generous spirit. He was a pioneer in library science, originating at the Athenæum many devices now in general use. A writer in the Christian Union at this time commended the library and referred to the courteous treatment of visitors, the absence of red-tape, and freedom from surveillance. Emerson and his daughter, Sumner and his friends, all helped to give the Athenæum its reputation. If the place was rather public for a proprietary library, few, if any, offered objections at that time. To the reporter in search of "copy" it was a happy hunting ground; and a writer in the Transcript for December 22, 1870, thus describes his visit to the Athenæum: —

"Presently the librarian approached the table, bearing a number of large volumes, followed by Senator Sumner, who, sitting down, began to consult them, now and then taking copious notes.

"He had been seated but a short time, when 'Tom Folio,'[1] the worshipper of Charles Lamb — who delights in exhuming from out the rubbish of old magazines and papers the stray writings of 'Elia,' Leigh Hunt, and other essayists, came bustling in. Conferring with the librarian for a moment, they both disappeared into one of the side rooms, from which, after a short absence, they emerged, laden with sundry old volumes which the indefatigable literary resuscitator bore away with him. Hardly had the latter disappeared when the Rev. Mr. Mountford, author of 'Thorpe,' and a recently published work on 'Miracles, Past and Present,' came in. Presently the polished writer of 'Six Months in Italy'[2] entered, and while looking over a collection of new publications, was joined by E. P. Whipple, with whom he had hardly exchanged greetings, when Ralph Waldo Emerson walked in, and the literary trio had a pleasant undertoned chat together."

during the last half of the nineteenth century. In 1846 John Amory Lowell was chosen Vice-President of the Board of Trustees and held the office for fourteen years, until he became President. During these years and throughout his presidency, 1860 to 1876, he devoted his energy and his best thought to strengthening through financial and administrative improvements the various departments of the institution.

The presidency of the elder Charles Francis Adams (1877–1879) was followed by that of Samuel Eliot, whose service in that office was the longest during the Athenæum's first century. Dr. Eliot was famed for his command of felicitous English, and for his ease and grace as a presiding officer. It was not uncommon for persons who had no interest in the annual business of the Proprietors to ask permission to attend the meetings, simply that they might listen to Dr. Eliot.

The steady accession of books led to crowded shelves, and forced frequent consideration of plans to relieve the congestion. The Trustees finally determined in 1888 to abandon the fine "Sumner staircase,"[1] which [1] Senator Sumner had served on the building committee in 1845 when plans for the Beacon Street building were under consideration. His great desire was for a spacious entrance. In a letter to his brother George he said: "I am anxious to secure a large, generous, hospitable vestibule, hall and stairway. I remember the stairs (by Bernini, I think) which lead to the Vatican on the right of St. Peter's. Can you send me the measurements of these — width, height, breadth? They were stairs of such exquisite proportions that you seemed to be borne aloft on wings." — Pierce's Sumner, ii. 334.

occupied nearly one-fourth of the building, and to devote the space to an iron stack, to the never-ending sorrow of the Proprietors. "Amid all the débris of repairs," said a writer in the Advertiser, "a small lantern of primitive aspect is set midway on the floor of the newly arranged narrow entrance as a beacon to the interior. A jog of imagination can make this lantern figuratively recall the Athenæum's small beginnings as a literary beacon to Boston."

Mr. Cutter declined reëlection as librarian early in 1893, and in April William Coolidge Lane, who had been elected February 20th, came in from Harvard to take up the administrative work. Mr. Lane's first report chronicles many interesting changes, such as the refurnishing of the Catalogue Room, including new drawers for the catalogue, each holding a single row of cards. A date card in the pocket, indicating when a book should be returned, aided Proprietors, as did an express and mail service for out-of-town readers. The system of wood dummies for new books temporarily withdrawn from their proper places on the shelves facilitated the tracing of current books.

Of even more importance, although no reference to this phase of Mr. Lane's work appeared in print, were his plans for simplifying and systematizing the methods of work and of preserving records within the building. Improvement along these lines had become imperative, after a century's growth of the Athenæum from a small reading-room.

Mr. Lane declined reëlection in 1898, as he had been appointed Librarian of Harvard University, and Charles Knowles Bolton was chosen his successor.

A gradual alteration of the interior arrangement of the Athenæum has been made necessary by the changing character of the buildings in the neighborhood. There are now (1907) tall buildings on the north, east, and west sides, forcing dependence almost wholly upon the southern exposure for sufficient light for reading and study rooms. This led to the policy of developing the Beacon Street side of the building as a stack or place for the storage of books, as distinguished from the side facing the grave-yard, which was to be made more serviceable to readers.

There were constant drains upon the Library income for repairs; and some form of relief for the crowded shelves, as well as adequate protection for the Athenæum from the increasing fire menace of neighboring tall buildings, pressed for consideration. An opportunity to sell the Athenæum property in Tremont Place upon advantageous terms brought before the Trustees, somewhat unexpectedly, consideration of the future policy to be pursued.

At a meeting of Proprietors in the Periodical Reading-Room on May 31, 1903, the Trustees were authorized, after discussion, to sell the Tremont Place property; they were also given authority to purchase land on Arlington Street or elsewhere and to erect and equip a suitable building. In accordance with this vote the Trustees bought the three estates on the northerly corner of Arlington and Newbury Streets, and the adjacent estate on Newbury Street.

On November 27th, the Proprietors held a second meeting at which the Trustees were authorized to sell or make a contract for the sale of the real estate and library building on Beacon Street; but a change in the financial conditions made it impossible at that time to make an advantageous sale of the Beacon Street property. Meanwhile a feeling developed in favor of the preservation of the building which had graced the city for half a century. Proprietors who found the Beacon Street site especially convenient joined with those who were moved by this sentiment, and together they called for a reversal of the previous policy. After many conferences and some discussion the Proprietors authorized the Trustees to order such improvements and repairs in the present building as they considered advisable, and to make such disposition of the Arlington Street property, either by sale or lease, as they in their judgment deemed best. The land on Arlington Street was sold in 1906.

Extensive repairs were made at the Athenæum during the summer of 1904, and in 1905. They included fireproofing the northwest section of the building, an elevator, and a new Trustees Room. The Trustees Room has an architectural dignity which must commend it to Proprietors and to their friends. A cabinet, containing objects of general interest, stands opposite the fire-place. The walls of the room have been panelled simply and effectively. Below the panels there are shelves filled with books; and above the panels, resting on the cap of the wainscoting, there are paintings, portraits of Athenæum worthies, and busts of distinguished literary men and statesmen. The great teak table, made from a single board and presented to the Athenæum many years ago by Colonel Thomas H. Perkins, occupies the centre of the room.

Many faces familiar to habitués of the Athenæum are not represented upon the canvases within its walls: Mr. Spooner of the long beard, serious face and busy pen; Elijah Kellogg, short and affable, who read a chapter in the Athenæum Bible every morning before losing himself in the land of story books; Mr. Ballou, the urbane traveller; Mr. Hawkes, who for years sat in the same chair at the same desk writing his magnum opus; David Balfour, a bachelor devoted to ameliorating the condition of Scottish widows; and our present Mr. Crockett, ever ready with recollections of Boston's earlier days.

Memory treasures also the distinguishing traits of those whose lives have given color to the gallery of daily visitors. At the British Museum "Napoleon," with heavy boots and spurs, for many years signed call-slips and received his books, until an unfeeling realist denied him royal prerogatives and turned him away. Our annals should record Lowell's "Tommy No-nose," who holds a place in literature, and the more famous

"Peele," who delighted mischievous lads by his vigorous opposition to noises of every description; as well as the stately image of "Queen Victoria," and the troublesome "King of Caramels." Nor should we forget the genius who conceived a monopoly of the morning newspapers by sitting upon two and holding one under either arm, while he leisurely and placidly read a fifth; nor those creatures of time and habit — the gentleman who retired to the hall regularly at eleven A. M. to eat a peppermint, and that other methodical person who appeared in his nankeen suit upon a fixed day each year to the never-ending confusion of the north wind. They were all devoted to the Athenæum and their lives are a part of its happy traditions.

Visitors from other cities where Athenæums, founded during the lifetime of William S. Shaw, have failed to succeed, ask why the forerunner of them all retains its vigor. One might answer that it lives because, like a wise statesman, it serves its generation. When there was no art gallery it provided one. After the Museum of Fine Arts was founded, the Athenæum withdrew from the field. So it was with law, theology, and medicine. When contemporary special libraries languished, the Athenæum absorbed their collections. As new special libraries became firmly established, it again restricted its field. When women, as a rule, read little beyond light literature, it was a scholar's retreat. To-day it is a family library. One might add, also, that it has been fortunate in its body of Proprietors. More than a thousand families devoted to letters have held its shares from generation to generation, keeping the ranks complete — an achievement that Bostonians may view with pride.

Its policy has been progressive, but, as far as possible, without the spirit of unrest which sometimes characterizes the introduction of new library methods. The best books for children now are purchased, and stand together upon the shelves. Music scores by the great composers may be taken out by Proprietors, although in the earlier days only biographies of musicians and essays on music were purchased.

The gift of a printing fund has afforded an opportunity to begin a series of volumes, bibliographical and historical, based upon the manuscripts and books owned by the Library. This series will, it is hoped, extend the usefulness and influence of the Athenæum, and will be the means of suggesting to Proprietors and others its value as a depository of manuscripts and books.

Through all its various changes, the Athenæum has represented what was best in Boston. The "golden age" of New England literature grew with it and even within its walls. Its traditions are a part of its life, and are passed on from father to son. Because its ideals have been high the Athenæum has appealed to men who lead as well as to those who follow. And with their continued support success in the future seems assured.

SPECIAL COLLECTIONS IN THE BOSTON ATHENÆUM

III

SPECIAL COLLECTIONS IN THE ATHENÆUM

EVERY large library is expected to have the writings of famous men and works of general interest in the various departments of learning. But in the accumulation of books through successive generations a library becomes conspicuous for growth in certain directions. Special collections may be acquired by gift or by purchases systematically carried on for several years. The Athenæum has several of these collections which will be noticed briefly for the benefit of students.

Washingtoniana

From 1848 to 1855 subscriptions were gathered in Boston for the purchase of part of the library of George Washington, then owned by Henry Stevens of London. Many of the volumes thus acquired bear the armorial book-plate of Washington and his autograph; they relate chiefly to agriculture and military science. Three hundred and eighty-four volumes belonged to the President, and others came from the library of Bushrod Washington. A large collection of volumes and pamphlets relating to General Washington has been added in recent years, so that the student will now find practically everything of importance. With the aid of one thousand dollars from the executors of Thomas Dowse the Athenæum was able to issue a very complete catalogue of the collection, with exhaustive notes by Mr. A. P. C. Griffin, the present Chief Bibliographer of the Library of Congress, and a scholarly study of Washington's library as recorded in the inventory of his estate prepared by Mr. William C. Lane, now Librarian of Harvard University. An excellent Index has been prepared by Mr. Franklin O. Poole.

Byroniana

The collection of works of the poet Byron was bought from Mr. J. W. Bouton in 1885. It numbered two hundred and six volumes and forty-six pamphlets, many of them first editions. In the course of fifteen years other volumes were added, so that the collection, while not complete, is representative.

Fine Arts

Among the valuable paintings retained in the building, the larger part of the collection being deposited in the Museum of Fine Arts, are four by Stuart, three by Harding, and others by Neagle, Marshall and Allston. There are many rare pieces of early American sculpture by Powers, Greenough, Frazee, and Crawford.

In 1859 Mr. Thomas Dowse, seeing the need in Boston of reproductions of famous paintings by old masters in European galleries, sent an artist abroad, and he made studies in water-color of fifty-two paintings. These came to the Athenæum in 1859.

A complete set of the Arundel chromolithographs may be seen in the building; many have been framed.

The best reproductions without color now comprise over ten thousand large carbon photographs, arranged in portfolios under the names of artists. This great collection has been brought together during a long period of years, the Fine Arts Committee having given careful attention to the selection of subjects. There are also in the Art Room thousands of pictures representing sculpture and architecture, both classic and modern; and a large collection of books on art.

Views of Old Houses

The Thwing collection, 5600 views of old houses, has both an antiquarian and an architectural interest. Miss Thwing in 1903 presented a large number of pictures of houses and early views of towns. To this collection have been added the wood engravings from Gleason's and Ballou's Pictorial and from many other works which could be had in duplicate for a trifling sum. In 1907 two hundred photographs of Boston streets and buildings, taken between 1850 and 1870, were purchased from Mr. A. H. Rickards.

Confederate Literature

Mr. William F. Poole began many years ago to collect books and newspapers published in the Southern States during the Civil War to illustrate the social life and economic conditions of that period. This collection has been called by Professor Ernst von Halle, an authority on the subject, the largest of its kind in the world. It includes medical and military works, school books, time-tables, novels with covers made of wall-paper, and good files of periodicals.

First Editions of American Authors

Recent interest in the works of our chief New England authors — Emerson, Hawthorne, Holmes, Longfellow, Lowell, Thoreau, Whittier — has called attention to the value of these writings as they first came from the press, and before revision by their authors in maturer life. It seemed best to withdraw these volumes from general circulation; it was then found that the Athenæum possessed an unusual collection. The titles wanting have been added from time to time, and a carefully prepared catalogue may be issued in the near future.

Early Boston Newspapers

The Athenæum has been able to preserve in remarkably good condition its files of early Boston newspapers. In 1903 Miss Ayer prepared a Check-list covering the period from 1690 to 1780. This list shows every copy of every Boston paper issued during these years now to be found in a dozen of the leading libraries of the United States. The list, with an historical introduction by Mr. Albert Matthews, a Trustee, is now in press, and will appear as one of the publications of the Colonial Society of Massachusetts.

The King's Chapel Collection

The library given to King's Chapel in Boston by William III. in 1698 has been in the custody of the Boston Athenæum since 1823. It is the oldest collection of books in New England, and it illustrates very clearly the literature enjoyed by a scholarly man during the first century of life in the English colonies.

Early United States Documents

The Athenæum has possessed for many years one of the best sets of early American Documents, based in part upon the collections of John Adams and John Quincy Adams. Following General A. W. Greely's check-list of Public documents of the first fourteen Congresses, 1789–1817, our documents were rearranged and carefully catalogued. By exchange with the War Department and the Library of Congress many documents were added, so that our representation of the first fourteen Congresses is worthy of special mention.

International Law

In 1879 Mr. George Bemis, a Proprietor, bequeathed twenty thousand dollars, one half of the income for the purchase of books, particularly works relating to international law. The collection now includes complete sets of the state papers of the chief countries of the world, with series of treaties, and many monographs and memoirs relating to subjects in International Law. It is supposed to be the best collection in America outside of Washington. Constant aid in the selection of books has been given by Professors A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard and George G. Wilson of Brown University.

Gypsy Literature

In May, 1901, it was announced that the trustees of the estate of Mr. Francis Hindes Groome, of Edinburgh, offered for sale his library of books, letters, and manuscripts bearing upon the study of the Gypsies. Mr. Groome has long been known as a writer for the leading encyclopædias and biographical dictionaries, as well as the foremost authority in England, if not in the world, on Gypsy lore. The sum required to purchase this collection was subscribed by four proprietors of the Athenæum, Charles Pickering Bowditch, Thornton Kirkland Lothrop, Albert Matthews, Henry Francis Sears, and in October the collection was received. It comprises over one hundred volumes. Some of these are rare, and others contain scarce tracts and magazine articles; there are also Mr. Groome's own books with his marginal additions; over thirty volumes of manuscript notes, lectures, etc.; and his correspondence with M. Paul Bataillard, the eminent French student of the Gypsies, covering the years 1872 to 1880.

Broadsides and Manuscripts.

An account of the manuscripts in the Athenæum has been given by Mr. A. P. C. Griffin in a supplement to the Librarian's Report for the year 1896. Since that time, however, many have been added, and the entire collection has been arranged and recatalogued. The titles will be found in the card catalogue under the heading "Manuscripts in the Library." The Ezekiel Price papers, including court, notarial, and shipping records, are of great antiquarian value. Aspinwall's Notarial Records from 1644 to 1657 have been published as volume thirty-two of the Boston Record Commissioners' Reports, and a Record of the County Court at Boston from 1671 to 1680 will soon be issued in the same series. Le Forestier's Relation and Topliff's Travels have appeared recently as publications of the Robert Charles Billings Fund.

The large collection of broadsides includes many unique or rare examples of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, with perhaps the best series now existing of Fast and Thanksgiving Day Proclamations issued by the governors of Massachusetts.

Roxburghe Club Publications

The very limited editions of the Roxburghe Club publications have made it difficult to obtain a complete set of these works. The volumes now on our shelves, with a few to be added, will make the series complete. The subjects treated have a wide range, including art, history, literature, biography, and archæology.

Dreyfus Affair

"L'affaire Dreyfus" promised to throw so much light upon military, legal, and social conditions in France that practically every volume published there has been acquired. In the collection are also many volumes issued in England and the United States, with some from almost every country in Europe.

Dutch History

In the year 1900 a Dutch bookseller's advantageous terms were accepted for a carefully selected collection of over a thousand volumes illustrating the history of the Netherlands and Dutch colonization. In this collection there are five contemporary pamphlets by and relating to Sir George Downing, a graduate in the first class at Harvard, 1642, and a representative of Cromwell and Charles I. in the Netherlands.

1826 Massachusetts Scientific Library Association — $3,715.00 in subscriptions, turned over to the Athenæum.

At a meeting of gentlemen held in the Academy's Room in 1826, Israel Thorndike, Jr, Amos Lawrence, John A. Lowell, George B. Emerson, John C. Gray, John Lowell, Jr, Wm Sturgis, Daniel Treadwell, Dr E. Hale and Edward Brooks were appointed a committee to solicit subscriptions for a Scientific Library. Soon after, the Athenæum Trustees chose a committee composed of Nathaniel Bowditch, Francis C. Gray, George Ticknor, Thomas W. Ward and Francis J. Oliver to consider the expediency of "uniting, in the Athenæum, the principal circulating libraries of this city" that the deficiencies of the larger library might be overcome. The Medical Library property and the subscriptions for the projected Scientific Library were soon made over to the Athenæum. See Quincy's History, page 94.

On May 9th, 1831, Joseph May called the attention of the Trustees to Mrs. Stuart's desire to remove to Newport, and her proposition, made some months earlier, to sell "the original portraits of Washington & his Lady . . . , painted at Philadelphia in 1796." A committee composed of T. H. Perkins and George Ticknor "easily" raised $1,500.00, and the portraits were purchased from Miss Jane Stuart, the legal owner, Mrs. Stuart at the same time surrendering "any right she might be supposed to possess."

From a copy in the Trustees' Records. Mrs. Stuart appears to have lost the original list.
